

At the dining table, on the couch or in bed: many employees have swapped their office workstation for working from home due to Corona. But only a few are really equipped to work from home for weeks. Although the kitchen table functions as a short-term solution, the longer the homework phase lasts, the more important an ergonomic, functional workplace becomes for concentrated work.

Sitting correctly is important for working at home permanently. The seat height and the height of the work desk must be coordinated to prevent back and neck pain. An ergonomic office chair is therefore also indispensable. In addition, the work surface should be large enough so that the laptop or monitor can be placed on the table with sufficient distance.

Numerous companies support their employees in their search for suitable furnishing solutions. But the employees themselves are also beginning to design their working from home professionally and to put plans that have been in place for a long time into practice – not only because it is not foreseeable that they will return to the office, but also because working from home will certainly play a greater role than before even after the Corona crisis.

Together with its dealer partners, ophelis currently offers fast-delivery package solutions that are both ergonomic and functional as well as homely. The combinations include – depending on individual requirements and space – electromotive sit-/stand-desks from the CL series or space-efficient folding tables on castors and the flexible “my stuff” storage space. The package is complemented by the deem bench on castors, which offers space for working from home and home schooling at the same time.

The ophelis special offer package is available from local partners while stocks last. The table is delivered and professionally assembled.

The ergonomic sit-stand workstation also for working at home
